The lost-in-translation communication phenomenon can have a powerful negative effect in online education and can be linked to student attrition. Data collected from Drexel University's MSHE Program during the Program's first academic year revealed that 12% of the students who opted to leave/withdraw based their decision on their experience ...

Lost in Translation: Importance of Effective Communication ...

In machine translation-mediated communication, a speaker and an addressee cannot share the same referring expressions; participants not only view messages written in different languages but translations between two different languages are not transitive: translation from language A to B and back to A does not yield the original expression.

Effects of Machine Translation on Collaborative Work

Activation of T cells requires a global surge in cellular protein synthesis, accompanied by a large increase in translation initiation[1][1]-[4][2]. A central component of the translation initiation machinery-the multi-subunit eukaryotic initiation factor 3 (eIF3)-is rapidly turned on when quiescent T cells are stimulated[3][3]. However, the precise role eIF3 plays in activated T cells ...
